BELLANCA PLANE MAY DEFINITELY BE OUT OF RACE

Attorney Advises Fliers Not To Sign Any New Contract

COURT ACTION LIKELY

"Trick" Clause Is Blamed For The Dispute At This Time

MITCHELL FIELD, NEW YORK, May 17 (I.N.S.)—The Bellanca plane was to fly the Bellanca plane race to Paris because of new dissension which rose to alarming proportions today.

G. W. Nutt, attorney for Lloyd Bertand, who with Clarence W. Chamberlin was to fly the Bellanca plane in the epochal air race, has advised his client not to sign the new contract offered by Charles A. Levine, president of the Columbia Aircraft Corporation. The document was expected to adjust all former difficulties.

Today it appeared likely that court action would be resorted to to straighten out the differences between their backers and the fliers.

Because of what he calls a "trick" clause inserted in the flight contract, Nutt is said to be ready to seek damages from Levine and was reported ready to ask an injunction to restrain the plane from leaving.

A conference of flying men and officials was to be held today at the office of Rodman Wanamaker. Just what will transpire at the meeting is problematical. There was no intimation that it might have to do with the New York-Paris flight.

When it became apparent to Bertand's friends that the flight was threatened, a group of them hastened to offer Levine $25,000 for the Bellanca plane, and announced they were prepared to back the airmen. The offer was turned down by Levine.

The unfavorable weather threw another hamper on the other, contemplated hop-offs. Captain Charles A. Lindbergh, the "flying fool," was prevented from starting from Roosevelt Field.

He has been given a final physical examination, and has been declared 100 per cent fit.

Not only were Bertand and Chamberlin at odds with Levine, their backer, and G. Bellanca, designer of the ship, but they were in disagreement with each other also.

The matter of carrying radio equipment split the fliers. Levine ordered the radio equipment taken off the plane. His action was supported by Bellanca and Chamberlin, but opposed by Bertand. The radio was taken off.

Bertand would not make a statement concerning the matter, but observers reported him to be "angry" and "extremely wrought up."

Differences over the proposed route of the plane caused additional discussion. Bertand has insisted upon a direct route by water, while Chamberlin has sought a route via Newfoundland and Ireland, chopping off much of the water route sought by Bertand. It was said that the fliers are almost hopelessly divided on this point.

It was learned that the verbal contract, supposed to clear up the matters of insurance provisions for the fliers' wives, division of awards and other money earned, had not been put in writing, as had been expected after Sunday's conference.

There was a feeling today that Commander Byrd, who is to fly the America with Bert Acosta, would beat his competitors in the start, because his plane would be better able to breast the head winds.

NEW YORK, May 17 (I.N.S.)—Despite eight days of continuous search, no trace had been found today of Captain Charles Nungesser and Captain Francois Coll, missing French aviators who were lost while trying to make a non-stop flight from Paris to New York.

LANCASTER, Pa., May 17 (I.N.S.)—Preparations were being made here today for the entertainment of 150th annual meeting of the Lutheran Ministerium, to be held in Lancaster June 6 to 10, inclusive.

Dr. Frederick H. Knebel, president of the United Lutheran Church of America will be an honored guest at the gathering, and will be principal speaker at the annual banquet. Dr. E. P. Pfattheicher, president of the Ministerium, will be in charge of the program.

TAMAUQUA, Pa., May 17 (I.N.S.)—Summit Hill Mine of the Lehigh Valley Coal and Navigation Company, where a mine fire has burned continuously since 1869, is being abandoned.

The famous mine, upon which the company has spent millions of dollars in attempts to extinguish the fire, is being stripped of coal, and it is estimated that within six months a deep hole in the ground will be all that is left of the mine.

ORATION DELIVERED IN CONTEST BY ROBERT F. LEHMAN SHOWED SPLENDID SUBJECT MATTER

"America's Contribution To Constitutional Government" Told of Principles of America's Great Document

IN A MOST intelligent manner did Robert F. Lehman, son of Dr. and Mrs. Frank Lehman, and a senior at the Bristol High School, tell of the principles established in the Constitution of the United States, when he delivered his oration in the semi-finals of the National Oratorical Contest at Norristown, on April 22nd, and again in the Philadelphia Regional Finals at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, last Friday evening.

The Bristol lad, who was defeated by James M. Tunnell, Jr., of Georgetown, Del., last week, delivered his matter in splendid form, and was awarded third place in the last contest.

The subject of his orations, which follows, is "America's Contribution To Constitutional Government":

"The Constitution of the United States grew and continues to grow in a soil made rich by all the virile traditions and experiences of a great people. The English-speaking race from its very beginning had a genius for government. Without their constructive ability, broad tolerance and an ever-readiness to make mutual sacrifices, the original draft of the American Constitution never could have been made and much less adopted, or put into execution.

"In the construction of the Constitution, the representatives of the American colonists had to face the acknowledged failure of their own Articles of Confederation, as well as the revolutionary upheavals in other countries, especially France, due to weak central governments. On the other hand was the danger of forming a new monarchy or dropping back under the control of the old. Either spelled doom to all the dreams and aspirations of this liberty-loving people who had already spent so much in blood and treasure. The Confederation failed because it lacked centralized power, but centralized power symbolized monarchy.

"It remained for the American colonist to put into tangible working form that proclamation which had appeared in the Declaration of Independence that 'governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed.' This was an almost revolutionary idea in the theory of government. The problem which now confronted the makers of our Constitution, was how to create a government strong enough to maintain its perpetuity and at the same time guarantee these rights to the individual.

"In order to secure these ends, the framers of the Constitution adopted various means not entirely new in themselves, but their adaptation of them was, in many cases, so striking and novel as to make them practically new.

ROOM AT THE TOP

In a few short weeks hundreds of thousands of boys and girls will graduate from high schools and colleges and face a world in which opportunities are almost endless. For it is one of the paradoxes of civilization that the more opportunities are utilized, the more new ones are thereby created.

The automobile, for example, has created a new field for the exercise of human ingenuity, while the by-products of this invention are amazing in their reach and scope. It might seem to the young graduate that everything worth while has been invented, discovered or utilized. Yet there is not a thing that contributes to human welfare and comfort, not a stick of furniture, not a household necessity, but is capable of improvement.

There is still a big field for human enterprise in the trifles which others pass by. Men have made fortunes out of the commonest and meanest things; scraps of leather, slag, junk, grit, and the by-products of mine and mill.

Opportunities? They are all around us. There is power lying latent everywhere waiting for the observant eye and the ingenious mind. Find out what the world needs and then supply that want. The patent office at Washington is filled with useless inventions and discoveries that have wasted human time and energy without adding a single dollar of wealth to the world. Don't add your bit to this mountain of wasted effort.

The greatest hindrance to advancement in life is the lack of observation and the inclination to take pains. The great things of the world have not been done by men of large means but of large vision. They have usually started where they stood, as Edison began his experiments in a baggage car when a newsboy.

There's plenty of room at the top. The history of America seems like the last effort of Providence in behalf of the human race. Never before were such fine openings, chances and opportunities. This is especially true for girls and young women. Emerson said, "The world is no longer clay, but rather iron in the hands of its workers, and men have got to hammer out a place for themselves by steady and rugged blows."

You have to be an old man before you believe a fellow ought to work and save while young.

But can't these chaps have personality-plus without such a shiny manicure?

You always wonder how a great man looks. Well, imagine him and then divide by six.

A guilty man's idea of a fair trial is one in which his witnesses are better liars than the others.

Magazine editors don't last long; and if the stuff they read and reject is worse than they accept, it's no wonder.

The way to treat spring fever is to elevate the feet, place them on a flat surface, such as a desk, close the eyes, open the mouth, and say: "Z-z-z."

Many persons would be better off if they did put off something until tomorrow.

The idea that the world owes every man a living has put many men in the poor house.

Matinee Ladies

"MATINEE LADIES," with May McAvoy, is a Warner Bros. picture of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Bob Ward, working his way through college, finds with his chums, Freddy and Arch, an easy way to earn money—working as dancing partners, of afternoons, for rich women in a fashionable New Jersey roadhouse. Bob thinks it isn't a fit way to make a living; but, to get funds to finish school, goes. At the Inn he sees the prettiest, sweetest girl he has ever laid eyes on. She is Sally, the cigarette girl. Reciprocating his interest, she warns him against the mysterious and beautiful Mrs. Hammond, habitué of the Inn, who asks to meet him.

Mrs. Hammond was positively radiant with interest and admiration as Bob, with his boyish and old-fashioned courtliness, acknowledged Madame Leonine's gushing presentation. An introduction that was deferential—to the Madame's part—to the last degree, and was as elaborate and ritualistic as any presentation at England's Court of St. James could possibly have been. A presentation that was watched, catlike and doglike, by all the ladies and lords, and coquette's and fops, and mistresses and gallants of this gay New Jersey palace of passion and mirth.

A presentation that was watched by Sally, the dainty little lady-in-waiting, from under the yellow silk fringe of her long lashes, with confidence—without fear.

CHAPTER VIII

Bob Ward, however, was feeling far from comfortable and self-assured as, at Mrs. Hammond's delicately expressed suggestion, he sat down at her table to chat a bit with her before the next dance should start. Madame Leonine padded away, through her jungle of tulle, to convey to the orchestra leader, Mrs. Hammond's preference of a selection for the next number. Life within the roadhouse settled back into its fuzzy routine, after the agitation caused by the advent of the Queen of Play subsided.

But nearly everyone continued to furtively watch Mrs. Hammond's appraising and testing of her new toy—said toy being Bob Ward, the six-foot-two gridiron champ.

Bob—oddly enough in one whose social perceptions, at least where women of sophistication figured, were ordinarily very discerning—how felt almost immediately this sense of being a toy. Of being a plastic plaything in the supple hands of a surprisingly clever player.

He was uneasy under the glinting directness of her stare—her uncannily merciless smile. Or was it really a gracious smile—a charming smile? He could not tell, for the life of him. He only knew that he wished himself safely off in a far corner alone with Sally. For here, with Mrs. Hammond's eyes boring into him so, he felt himself slowly dissolving inside, as it were—disintegrating, slipping away from the safe moorings of his clean youth, into the shallow but terribly swift river of this woman's dominating nature. He wished she would quit looking at him so—ravishingly, was it? He was beginning to feel a bit dizzy; a bit carried out of himself. Good Lord, was she trying to hypnotize him?

Was that it? Almost involuntarily, as he mechanically returned monosyllabic answers to her softly insistent questions, he gripped the edges of the table. It was as though he felt this physical precaution necessary to guard him from falling into those deep, dark pools of volcanic eyes. Flaming craters. Good Lord, but this woman was magnificent! Beautiful as a finely chiselled masterpiece of statuary; alluring as a tropic night!

Oh, thank Heaven!—there, the music was starting up. Time for the next dance. Then, with that over, he would escape. She would want someone else—especially if he danced and acted as stupidly overawed as he felt. Escape! Yes, that was the precise word to express it. It would be escape—for now Bob felt himself enmeshed, imprisoned in a miasmatic swamp.

Out upon the floor. The Tigress and the Lion. Away into the swirl of the dance. Bob discovered, to his satisfaction, that Mrs. Hammond danced little short of divinely; and that, in surrendering herself to the artistic impulses and rhythms of the cadenced measures, she did not keep up a persistent and idle chattering. Which was a welcome relief from the pathetic clumsiness of some of the dowagers, and the incessant jawing of Mazie Revere.

Bob found his mental and spiritual alarms abating in the pleasure of the physical perfection of Mrs. Hammond as a dancing partner. Then, too, he was fortified by the reassuring, approving, subtly radiant smiles which Sally Smith bestowed upon him every time he glanced her way—which was just as often as he could do so without disconcerting her.

Knightly romances of old have often related how many a queen and princess have benefited through the ardor aroused in their spouses by the memories or thoughts of beggar maids. So, in a way, it was with Bob and Sally and Mrs. Hammond. For once, during the course of the dance, when Bob caught a particularly lovely smile from Sally, it was reflected, quite unconsciously, by, in a tightening of his arms around the object he held in them; which, according to his climbing thoughts, was Sally Smith; but, in reality, was the graceful form of Mrs. Hammond.

She, gratified at the sudden demonstration of apparent ardor, looked up with quick and tingling surprise into Bob's flushed face. Somehow, she realized what had happened. And as much to hide his embarrassment as to remedy the slip, more an apology than a promise, he smiled into her eyes. There was little else he could do, under the circumstances. But it only served to intensify what had been on his part a pure mistake; it only served to increase Mrs. Hammond's misapprehension that he had quite voluntarily signified a flirtatiously warm interest in her.

She pressed her body closer to his in the enchantment of the dance. She closed her eyes, and gave herself deliciously over to the strong and pleasant guidance of his arms. She did not speak. But she breathed a little harder; colored a little deeper. She was very happy.

Bob, despite an underlying fear of the fire that he had now and then caught flashes of far down in the darkness of her eyes—as one might glimpse ruddy glows when the stove door of a distant train is swung to and fro at night—felt a superficial thrill that even the safe smile Sally could not banish from his pulses, his lips.

It was a point of the pride of his masculine youth to respond to the fact that this gorgeous creature, this beautiful and ultra-modern woman of the fashionable world, was evidently "falling" for him.

Let Freddy and Arch kid him now! He could tell them a thing or two.

Anyhow, surely if they were using their eyes they could see for themselves just how things stood. How Mrs. Hammond, as trustfully as a babe, was allowing herself to be wafted around the room in his arms.

Certainly, Bob could not help noting, even what with his pleasure in the sensation of the dance itself and his glee toward the hovering Sally Smith, that many of the dancing couples, and all of the sitters, were admiringly and enviously watching Mrs. Hammond and him.

Madame Leonine, enraptured, stood in a palm bower near the orchestra and rubbed her hands ecstatically. Never had her polished floor been graced before by so outstanding a couple. Added to the avariciousness of the roadhouse keeper, was a gratification of the showmanship in Madame Leonine, and still something more—an appeal to the latent sense of the beautiful, which, though seemingly incongruous and out of place in such creatures, is nevertheless existent in so many women of the lower realms of the stage and the informal entertainment world.

Freddy and Arch watched, and Freddy managed to whisper to Arch, as they swayed close in a hesitating measure of the dance: "How are we going to keep him bawling his books, now that he's hugged the Queen?"

Sally watched, and was pridefully sure that it was Bob, her partner, who was showing Mrs. Hammond off to such good advantage. The woman had never looked so wonderful with any other dancer. It was the company, the partner—of course! But Sally would be relieved when Mrs. Hammond would have some other partner.

There, the dance was ending now. Sally was vaguely disturbed by tremors of suspense. Would Mrs. Hammond be so ready to surrender this—this attractive partner? (To be continued)

HEALTHY OLD MEN AND WOMEN NEED NEVER HAVE GRAY HAIR

As Long As Color Glands Remain Normal and Active Plenty Of Pigment Will Keep Hair Its Natural Shade

IF HAIR IS FADED AND STREAKED WITH GRAY BEGIN REVIVING COLOR GLANDS

Simple Tonic Starts Youthful Color Returning Again

Everybody knows if their color glands and hair roots are active and normal they will continue indefinitely to have rich, natural colored hair entirely free of gray and off-colored locks.

A doctor several years ago asked himself this question: "Why not rub a stimulating tonic into the scalp that will revive, strengthen and tone up those inactive glands so that nature in her own inimitable way will resume putting plenty of pigment into the hair tubes—surely the hair will then again resume its original, natural, beautiful shades of youth regardless of the user's age or the condition of their hair."

REMARKABLE DISCOVERY

The doctor's search for a tonic that would accomplish this purpose led him into endless experiments, but the final result was worth it. He didn't want a dye or tint and it of course must be harmless and something that could be used for years and years without the slightest injury to hair or scalp. Under the name of Lea's Hair Tonic anyone may now purchase the tonic he finally perfected. For several years now hairdressers and people scattered all over the country have been using it. Results are so natural, gradual and nice that men as well as women use it.

It doesn't stain the scalp. One's friends seldom notice the gradual change and to test what it will do one needs only to apply it a week or so to some small spot and watch results.

Users have been amazed at the younger appearance that comes with the disappearance of gray hairs from their head. If any reader desires to try a bottle of Lea's Hair Tonic on the maker's absolute guarantee of complete satisfaction they should pin a dollar bill to this advertisement and send it to the Lea's Tonic Company, Brentwood, Md., with their name and address plainly written. A generous sized bottle will be sent prepaid anywhere. Leading druggists have Lea's Hair Tonic, $1.00 per bottle.—(Adv.)

Firestone Dealers

Have Purchased 100% More GUM-DIPPED TIRES

[This Year Compared With Same Period Last Year]

THE demand from car owners for Gum-Dipped Tires has given Firestone Dealers a large increase in volume enabling them to sell these tires to you at the lowest prices in history.

On the cars of motorists everywhere, these wonderful tires are delivering unheard-of long mileage with greater safety and comfort.

The Firestone Balloon Tread, scientifically designed three years ago, and unchanged today, follows the contour of the tire carcass with no excess rubber at the edges to cause "shoulder breaks". Narrow rider strips permit the tread to yield to depressions and cling to the road, preventing skidding. This tough, pliable tread has the wear-resisting qualities for thousands of extra miles.

Such a tread must be placed on a carcass with the qualifications to withstand the terrific flexing that this design permits. The Firestone carcass is made of cords dipped in a rubber solution which not only saturates and insulates every fiber of every cord, but unifies sidewalls with carcass, avoiding separation under the extreme flexing.

Many Firestone Dealers are prepared to offer you a liberal allowance for your old tires, on a new set of Gum-Dipped Tires to start the motoring season.

To meet a demand for a low price tire and tube, Firestone designed and manufactures, for Firestone Dealers only, Oldfield Tubes and Tubes, which carry the Standard Manufacturers' Guarantee.

nothing in realizing that they are but means through which that all-important consideration was secured—the individual's God-given right to work out his own destiny without let or hinder, so long as he does not interfere with the same right to every other man, or as later phrased by Abraham Lincoln—"Government of the people, by the people and for the people."

"Sir William Pitt made the prediction that the Constitution of the United States would become the wonder and admiration of all future generations and the model for all future constitutions. We have contributed to the formations of many constitutional governments. These have met with varying degrees of success. We believe that where failure has followed, it has not been because of defect in theory, but rather due to the failure of the people, especially the leaders in restraining their sudden impulses, instead of ever looking forward with patience and endurance, for 'Where there is no vision, the people perish.' Shall we be thought pessimistic if we express the belief that America has a serious task before her, a solemn obligation in the preservation of true constitutional government? Is there not danger, that too much absorbed in the business of assuring her material prosperity, she may fail to realize that certain perils threaten her own institutions, through the indifference of her individual citizens, with a tendency to substitute license for liberty? Is there danger that we, too, may 'hold on to the form and lose the substance'?

"It has been said that while the final signature was being affixed to the draft of the Constitution, Benjamin Franklin looked at a carving of the sun on a chair in which Washington had been sitting, and said 'I have often wondered whether that was a rising or a setting sun. Now I know that it is a rising sun.' If it were possible for Franklin to return, as he had expressed a desire, to the scene of his earthly activities, and view our country with its vast stretches of land, teeming with a thriving population, with its unlimited natural resources, its marvelous advances in art, science and industry, its world-wide influence as a power, would the grand old sage be reassured as to his prediction that it was a rising sun? Or would his philosophical mind cause him to inquire into the basic problems of civilization, in regard to the individual man? Is he advancing intellectually and spiritually in proportion to his material achievements? Or is his spiritual nature slowly deteriorating? Is he developing that sound and safe leadership, through which America has given so much to Constitutional Government. The Constitution has stood the test of forceful assault from within and without. She has established her leadership in material matters till her power and influence are felt to the uttermost parts of the earth.

"If the American people will devote themselves individually to the cultivation of that genius for self-control, self-direction and the development of that Constitutional Conscience of which Burke spoke one hundred and fifty years ago; if they will cultivate those supreme principles of peace, justice and liberty within law, then Dr. Franklin's question will be answered for all time and our Constitutional Sun will be a perpetually rising sun, and her power shall be such that her beneficent rays shall spread warmth and light to all peoples and all nations, to the end that universal peace and joy shall be the heritage of all men, everywhere. Then may we paraphrase the song of the Psalmist, 'Lift up your hearts, O America, and be ye lifted up, and the King of Glory shall come in.'
